Spyce
241 Washington Street
Downtown Crossing, Boston

Welcome to Spyce. The first restaurant where your meal is made entirely by robots. That's right, robots.

This restaurant is lightyears ahead of the game because it was completely designed by a group of MIT students and celebrity chef Daniel Boulud. Together, they wanted to bring affordability together with quality. At $7.50 per bowl, the meals served at Spyce are filling and delicious.

When you walk in, you immediately are greeted by an employee and ushered to the giant tablets to order.

There are pre-made bowls that you can add and modify ingredients to depending on what you are feeling that day.

Once you submit your order, the machine adds the ingredients and begins cooking everything perfectly to your liking. Talk about service.

INSIDER TIP The MIT crew had an incredibly lucky guess when they were sending out their promo video- they guessed Daniel's email and was able to catch his interest with a video they made highlighting their idea. He was hooked.

Boston Calling
Friday 5/25 - Sunday 5/27
Harvard Athletic Complex

It's time! Boston Calling is here again. Debuting in 2013, this five year old festival has transformed into one of the Top 10 Festivals in the US according to Consequence of Sound.

This year, the lineup is better than ever. Eminem, The Killers, Jack White, Queens of the Stoneage are the main headliners.

Boston Calling has moved to Harvard Athletic Complex and has expanded to be one of the main events of the summer. This year Natalie Portman will be performing a live film series and co-hosting throughout the day, something that is completely new to the Boston Calling scene. On top of that, the cast of Pod Save America, one of the top 10 podcasts of all time, will be doing a live episode at Boston Calling this year for the first time.

INSIDER TIP The National's frontman, Aaron Dessner, has played a huge role in building up Boston Calling to what it is today. As a co-curator, he has been able to attract huge names such as Eminem and Beck to come and play this local-sized festival.
